

Method for Accessing a Database

Abstract

A method is provided to store data in a computer database so that data from multiple organizations may be accessed by users employing a single instance of an application. Use of an organizational identifier for each data record allows a common set of database tables to hold data from all organizations. User access to data in the database is restricted based on the organizational identifier.